Hello, Everybody!

I wanted to take a few minutes and update you on what we have been working on for the past few months.

Several years ago we re-designed the underlying databases and business logic in our system and moved from a locally hosted program to a cloud-based, fully hosted system.

Since then, we have added a lot of new features, and almost all of our clients are now using this new system!

But there was still one remaining element that we wanted to address. Currently, the back-end functionality is accessed using Remote Desktop, which allows you to access our servers to use the back-end Windows Legacy application.

Since January, we have been working full-time on implementing a new web-based back-end that will allow you to access the back-end from your web browser. Most of the work has been completed, and we will start rolling it out later this month.

This is not an “upgrade”; the functionality, data structure, and business logic remains exactly as it was. This is simply a new interface to the functionality, and as we roll the new site out, you can use either the new web-site or the old Remote Desktop back-end, or both. Eventually, the old legacy back-end will be phased out as we add more and more features to the newer interfaces. You will also be able to easily use the new interfaces from tablets as well as desktop systems!

The really exciting part of this new interface is that it also will allow us to redesign our apps to use it directly and run as 100% native apps.

The next few pages show a few of the new pages. You will see that they will look and feel very close to the current back-end screens!
